42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

Beneath the weatherboard and corrigated tin which cover the exterior, is a good example of Fachwerk construction. (For definition of terms, see survey of Jost and McQueny farm: 43N,5W,29) The property has been neglected for a number of years -- the porch has disappeared, and the interior is in very poor condition. The double door design is used to provide access to each storey. Still visible beneath the weatherboard are a stile and strut which were numbered

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE with Roman numerals to assure proper matching of timbers. (Compare with discussion of Kothoff-Weeks farm) The framing is less complex than in other surviving half timber structures which I surveyed -- i.e.,the struts are thinner and the stiles less frequent.

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE

The residence housed the Wehmhoemer family who were local cabinet and coffin makers. The father, Johann, was born in Hesse-Detmold in 1828 and died in Drake in 1899. Van Ravenswaay pictures a glass cupboard attributed to this family in The Arts and Architecture of German Settlements in Missouri on page 345. The trade was carried on by the son and grandson.

The construction of the east wall is log half-timber with brick rubble fill and weatherboarding. This structure has been altered and added to at a variety of periods. Some original window casements remain intact.

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE

This is said to be the original studio of Johann Wehmhoemer. The interior demonstrates several work rooms with living quarters in evidence on the second floor. Several of the rooms are finished in paneling which appears to be of a later date. Some of the families' unfinished caskets remain in the work areas. The owner is presently trying to renovate the structure which is in poor to fair condition.

8. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE

This was either the original residence used while the brick home was being constructed or perhaps it was the original workshop for this cabinet constructing family. The presence of heat in the structure suggests one of the two possibilities. Building, because of its solid construction, remains in very good condition. Owners have been preserving the structure slowly but surely.

I. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE

In the late nineteenth centuryDrake was a center for trade and crafts in rural Gasconade County. The Drake General Store must have been the gathering place for the area. Unlike its counterpart in Bay, the store has not survived its original use. Now it seems to be a place where people drop their junk for want of a better place to get rid of it. According to the local population, old stoves, oil drums, etc. appear from time to time...and disappear from time to time.

Gable stone with "1876" inscription. Fine example of stone masonery. Double door design on first and second stories in front. Most shutters are original. Interior in fine condition. Preservation has been done to preserve original design with the exception of carpeting in some areas. Addition to the rear contains kitchen area. This was thought to have been added around 1900. Wine cellar has elaborate arched doorway. Originally owned by the Langenberg family.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

This much abused example of half timbering is of considerable interst.(I use half timbering to refer to those structures in which the designer intended to leave exposed both framing and nogging. In Gasconade County,this includes only the section of the building protected by the porch which extends over the primary facade.The present example should be compared to the Kothoff-Weeks house) Remnants of the original weatherboard are in evidence. As in the other structures I have examined, the nogging was not extended beyond the plate in the gable end,but the unfilled frame was covered with weatherboard. Here the sash windows have been replaced with plexiglass and the ubiquitous corrigated tin used to conceal rather than repair structural flaws. The double door design is peculiar. The door to the left (in the photograph) no longer provideseaccess to the attic, as the stairs terminate above the door at the wall line.I suspect that the staris originally turned to the right and were anchored to the porch,creating a balcony above the present door enframement.(Van Ravenswaay describes what appears to be a similar method of construction (p.57).

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

Van Ravenswaay mentions the Brinkmann-Adams farmhouse and suggests that the tructure was built in two phases, ca. 1874 and 1889. Two gablestones identify he initials of the builder-owner (A.F.B.) and the date when the second section was completed (1889). The later addition includes only the two right bays, as is lear from an inspection of the attic conducted by the owner. It is probably at his time that the two storey porch with pediment, the belfry, and the gable cornices were added. The walls are of coursed rubble construction and pargetted to replicate ashlar. I suspect that the original section 3 left bays in photograph) were not pargetted until the second phase was completed. The effect is a uniform facade in five bays. The lintel courses are uniform throughout, consisting of a segmented rubble arch centered over a curved asing. It is conceivable due to differences in construction, that the original ection should be dated as early as 1850. A comparison with the 1876 Langenberg farmhouse - modified Georgian- of 2½ stories would be profitable. (43N,5W,8)

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES
The original purpose for which this building was constructed is uncertain. The present owner suggests that it was designed for slave quarters, and the two rooms into which the structure is divided by an original wall, were clearly at one time inhabited. It is also clear, however, that the structure served as a cure and smoke house, and I suspect that it was designed as a summer kitchen. It seems that both the central hearth and the stove flue void in the gable end are original. This flue opening was well constructed with a

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE rowlock course surround visible on the gable end. The pargetting of the coursed rubble walls which match the farmhouse, suggest that it was constructed in the same period. The lintel course, also matching, consists of segmented rubble arches, centered over curved casings. The porch which extends across the primary facade appears to be original.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

This barn undoubtedly replaced the older stone structure on the property (represented in survey). This lowlands type utilizes a two level construction with the ground level for livestock and a second level for the storage of hay. The walls are of uncoursed rubble, with well slashed mortar jointed pargetted to replicate ashlar. This wall treatment as well as the lintel course (segmented rubble arch) is similar to the farmhouse, and suggests that this structure was

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE completed about 1890. Splayed loop holes are found in the gable ends, as well as in the West facade, where they appear to originate at the rafter plate -- an unusual design. The loft joists were extended through to the wall line and are visible on the facade. Hardware and board and batten doors are original.

The walls are of random coursed rubble. The lintel course consists of a segmented arch centered over a curved casing with alternating stretchers and a double rowlock. The foundation extends approximately 1 inch beyond the wall line -- a feature found on other stone structures in the county. Consistent with German methods of construction observed in the area, the hewn rafters were butted at the ridge and their heels were slotted and pegged into the ends of ceiling joists. These joists were then extended through the facade and the ends left

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE exposed under the eaves. They are clearly visible in this example because of the narrow projection of the roof line. Though the structure is now used as a chapel for the adjoining cemetary, it was originally a school. Though the belfry has disappeared, the gable entrance of one bay offers parallels with other stone school houses in the northern part of the county.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES
This unusual structure should be examined carefully, as I did not have access to the interior. The walls of this one bay structure are of coursed rubble construction with segmented stone lintel courses in the second storey and thin single span stone lintels spanning the small windows in the ground storey. The floor joists of the second storey are visible on the facade, having been carried through to the wall line (approximately ten courses above ground level). The

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE ground storey was reportedly used as a wine cellar,while the room above served as living quarters.(Priorities were rigidly defined) A frame addition extends the gable end by one narrow bay.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES
This fine structure is profitably compared to the Loehning barn (45N,5W,11), both deriving from a northern European prototype. Both utliize a two level construction, with ground level for livestock and a hayloft above. The dimensions of this example are however, more generous. A wagon door is centered in the West facade, and finished with an arched lintel course of limestone rubble. Splayed loop holes for ventilation are found on three sides of the

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE structure. The walls are of coursed rubble construction in both the original rectangular plan and the later lean-to addition on the East elevation -- an unusual feature. The roof has been replaced as well as the rafter framework and plate, now consturcuted of 2 x 4s.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

A fine, though ill fated, example of a vernacular interpretation in brick of the Georgian style. It is laid in an American common bond with well articulated lintel courses in double rowlock. Dentil work appears under the eaves and a cornice return extends the cornice on both gable ends. There is evidence to suggest that a porch on the primary facade was extended to the second storey.

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE

The ell plan is a common choice for the brick farmhouse in the area.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

Until 10 years ago there was a brick kiln on the property. Evidentally the original owner was a brick maker. The buildings on the property are all of brick including a Purple Martin house. The house is pf interest because of the decorative brick headers and arched, keystone window treatment. The structure originally had a double front door design but one door has subsequently been bricked over. The roof is somewhat unusual for this area. There is a central chimney stack.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

Like its counterparts in Drake and Bay, this general store was the focal point of this rural area. Located near the Bourbeuse River, this was the only structure of its kind in the Southeast section of the county.

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE

Like the store in Bay, this variety also demonstrates housing for the owners or labor. The design is simple yet functional. Unlike the stone construction of Bay or the Brick of Drake, the Tea store has not withstood the ravages of time. Additions can be seen on the North and West sides. One would suspect that this store will soon be gone for its structure is no longer sound and the cost of renovation would seem prohibitive to most potential buyers.

Two lean-tos and one gable structure. These out-buildings once served as storage and work areas for the General Store. They are certainly examples of the decay of the property in general. Their construction was fairly poor initially and they are in the last stages of demise.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES
The second story porch on the primary facade is possibly inspired by the proximity to the Gascondade River (so Van Ravenswaay),though the cool breezes and elevated prospect are probably factors in the design. Similar construction is in evidence in Penn. Other features are unusual: The unique columns are of rubble masonry,outside supports being square, and the two inner columns round. The gable-kick is not common in this area,nor are the flat gauged stone lintels.

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE Two interior fireplaces. Segmented stone lintel over entrance to primary facade. The arched fanlight is more elaborate than any discovered in the county, the rectangular fanlight of 3-5 lights being common.

The relationship of past owners to the Fredericksburg Ferry,which adjoins the property,should be investigated.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

The gable stone which dates this structure also reveals the original designation: "Deutsche Evan.St.Johannis Kirche". This structure is common in the area: a rectangular plan in which the entrance is centered in a gable end,and with three or four windows along each side of the nave. The walls of this example are of coursed rubble,with dimensions as recorded by Van Ravenswaay as 45'x28'. Typical of later stone structures, the mortar joints are well defined and pargetted to

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE replicate the more precise ashlar courses. The four lancet windows (with Venetian shutters) are headed by a segmented lintel course in the pointed style of the Gothic Revival. The more common rounded segmented arch is found above the entrance in the gable end. A wooden steeple consists of a square base,octagonal drum and round spire.(It should be noted that this plan is related to other building types in the area -- notably the stone school houses represented in the survey.)

44. DESCRIPTION OF ENVIRONMENT AND OUTBUILDINGS

A parsonage,not represented in the survey dates from ca.1920.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

Interesting use of materials and design. This L shaped structure with porch addition can be found in many parts of the county dating from 1880 until around 1930. The concrete blocks are rendered ro replicated dressed stone. The design is simple, yet functional.

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE

The barn is much older which indicates that this was the second residence on the property.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

The condition of this structure makes any reconstruction of building phases very difficult. It appears that the V-notched log section in two stories is original. Chinking is still visible as are the lath strips to which weather-board was later applied. A framed ell was later added with two rooms nad a central hall. Finally this ell was extended and a lean to added to the rear wall. The log section was obviouslydesigned as a dwelling, though later additions suggest that it has functioned as a barn for a number of years.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

A gable stone on the primary facade dates this structure. This is a fine example of a vernacular interpretation of the Georgian style. The walls are of coursed rubble construction with well defined mortar joints which are extended to emphasize the courses -- essentially, pargetting. Four dormer windows are symmetrically ordered on the low pitch of the hipped roof. The door surround is centered in five bays and emphasized by a simple arched two light transom. The lintel courses are uniformly segmented arches with a tapered keystone -- an unusual feature in lintel treatment in the area. The restoration of the home, not yet complete, has been careful. The second storey was originally used as a dance hall, and the musicians gallery is still in tact. The floors and walls have been meticulously restored -- even the paint was mixed to match original fragments.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES
The original log section (right on photograph of facade) is joined in a well executed half dovetail. The logswhich extended to the apex of the gable have not survived. I suspect that this structure was moved from another site, as the only foundation visible consists of random stone supports. As a result the sill is in places badly decayed. Later additions (a lean-to,and a bay with gambrel roof) create a typical late ninteenth century barn complex.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

This fascinating stone structure is very unusual in design. The front demonstrates a door and window to the left but no window to the right. Most interesting is the lean-to living and porch section to the rear. This section is original and the cantilevered support beams can be readily seen in the porch area. The original windows remain intact in most cases. A metal roof has been added. Large, single stone steps are still in evidence to the rear entrance . Doors are original. The front porch is an addition.

This appears to have been used as both living and barn quarters for a period of time. It may have been the quarters for the tenant. Saddle-notch design. To left of entrance is a living quarters, to the right of this area is an open bay area, in a dogtrot like arrangement. To the right of the bay is the grain storage area. Metal roof is a replacement. Board and batten weatherboarding in some area. A stock area has been added to the rear. Structure is in danger of decaying.

42 Further Description of Important Features

Attic reveals old log structure with V-notch style. Cellar demonstrates hand hewn beam supports. Stone Steps lead to cellar. Original hinges and locks can be found on original center door. House was originally 2 1/2 stories. About 1920 one entire floor was removed and roof was lowered. The owner, although in residence at the time, does not remember why this was done. The old second story windows can still be seen in the attic. At this time the lean-to was added to the front. It has a porch and kitchen. The home is still without plumbing and cooking is done on a wood stove. Heating is done a room by room basis with wood stoves being the source.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

The walls are of coursed rubble construction,well slashed with mortar and scribed to replicate ashlar courses. Compressed stone lintel courses are well executed and typical of early segmented arch construction in the area. Casings are curved,thus centereing the supporting arched lintel course -- a common 19th century solution. The facade consists of a balanced pattern in three bays, though the dimensions are unusually generous. On the front elevation (ground

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE level) is an overlight of three lights which was originally duplicated over the entrance to the first storey on the rear elevation. It was suggested that a porch extended across this rear elevation,but a frame and asbestos addition of 1955 conceals the facade. Original lintel courses and door enframement are visible on the interior,but are significantly altered. A massive coursed rubble wall surrounds a portion of the property. Neither the ground floor nor the unfinished attic are presently in use.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

This is a fine example of a log structure in which the logs were extended to the apex of the gable end --few have survived in tact. The ridge poles which originally supported the shake roof are also preserved. The half-dovetial lower courses are completed by a V-notched section -- this particular combination of notching techniques is not uncommon in structures which combine two joining methods. Two logsin the side wall originally projected

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE to support a porch roof, though the present corrigated roof was not extended far enough to protect the cantilevered beams and decay is advanced. As in the other log structure on the property, wood slats rather than chinking is the original treatment between log courses.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

I suspect that this is a double pen log structure, now concealed under deteriorating weatherboard siding. Of the two bays, the front bay is at least in part half dovetail, while the rear appears to be consistently V-notched. The slope of the roof suggests two bays divided by a central hall of approximately fifteen feet. A lean-to addition which includes a gable end entrance and a half porch along the primary facade is probably a reconstruction of an original porch which extended along the entire facade.

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE

Such a homestead, which includes numerous log structures (see additional surveys), was probably quite common in the area, but few have survived. Prosperity often involved neglect or destruction of original log outbuildings.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

This interesting structure preserves the original log dwelling as well as the stone section completed in 1872. The log structure is now covered with weatherboard and corrigated metal siding which replicates stone, but the logs are visible under the stone piers which were constructed when the lean-to porch (framed) was added ca.1910. No joining technique is visible. The walls are of coursed rubble construction

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE though the work is essentially ashlar even though the dressed surfaces of the stones are not highly finished. The well defined mortar joints are pargetted to emphasize the courses. The window enframements to my knowledge are unique in the area: large stone sills and massive flat single span lintels (roughly dressed) were used throughout. The door is centered in three bays of the stone addition and headed with a four light transom.

This half dovetailed structure has recently suffered. The restoration of the original section was careful, while the addition (see photograph) is inconsistent with the original design. This is a particularly fine example of the half-dovetail joining technique though an occasional V-notch is found in the lower courses.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES
This is an unfortunate example. A fine stone smokehouse of coursed rubble construction was essentially destroyed in order to enlarge the structure in ca.1950. The owner does not recall the original plan,but I suspect that the present gable end was the original primary facade. It is clear that a door was eliminated to create the present gable end window. The window on the north end,which survives,is now sealed ooff with concrete blocks.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES
This structure, originally designed as a press house, was later converted into a dwelling and a frame addition with lean-to sheds added the necessary living space. Now abandoned, the brick nogging is clearly visible in the deteriorating frame section as one wall had been removed to provide a storage shed for tractors. The press section is of rubble construction, randomly coursed, and covered with plaster and whitewash. Though it is not certain that this is the original wall treatment, examples of this technique are found in the area. The

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE arched lintel course consists of alternating double rowlock and stretcher bricks, centered over a curved casing. Six over six lights are used throughout. The field (to the right in photograph) once provided access to a large door (with matching lintel course) in the banked hill below. This entrance was later sealed off with brick and fieldstone.

This type of concrete block house can be found in many parts of the county, especially Hermann. Molded to replicate stone, the entire structure is painted a glossy silver. Front reveals large bay window and porch as well as 4 simple, double hung windows. Two dormers are seen in the half story. An elaborate metal fence surrounds the front court. The back left section of the roof is hipped. One exterior fireplace is visible on the left.

A fairly typical late nineteenth century barn. As the needs of the farm grew, additions to the side and rear were added. Weatherboard, for the most part is original. Silo is state of decay. We find that the use for most silos in the county has disappeared and generally speaking they are not functioning but rather being allowed to decay. Hand hewn beam construction. Lightning roods. Some original hardware on the bay doors.

Although this tall granary can be readily seen in other parts of the United States, it is fairly unusual for Gasconade County. The original weather-boarding remains intact, although decay is taking its toll. A stock feeding area has been added. Roof demonstrates a very hight pitch.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

The prototype for this impressive stone barn is to be found in the flatlands of northern Germany. It is a two level construction, with a ground level for livestock and a hayloft above. The narrow dimensions (Van R.:24'2") suggest that this represents an early building tradition. A wagon door which extends from the ground to the eaves, is centered on the West facade and appears to have been covered originally with a pent roof -- an unusual feature in Missouri-

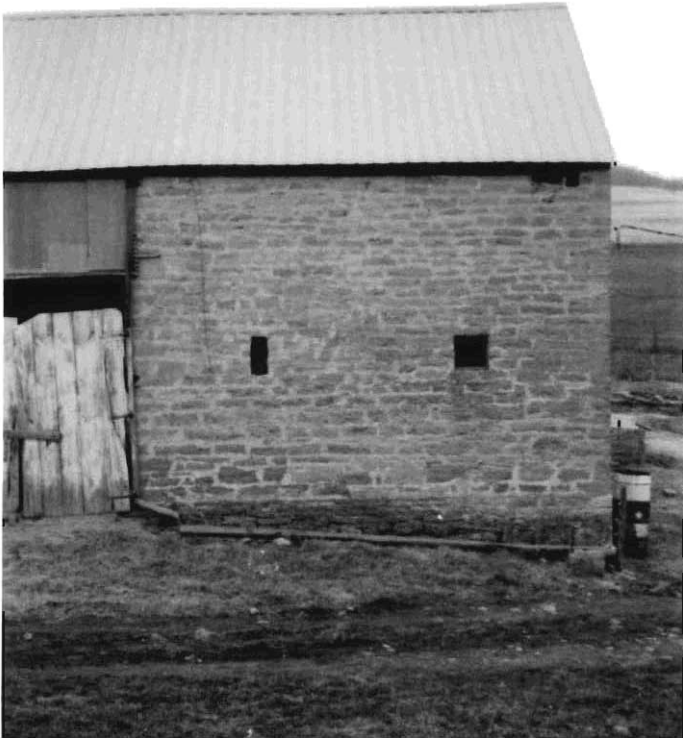

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE German architecture. Unsplayed loop holes for ventillation are found in both gable ends. The walls are of rubble construction, randomly coursed and well slashed with mortar. (Minor repairs on the joints are necessary) At each bay, the ceiling joist has been extended through the facade and the end left exposed under the eaves. Portions of the interior are of Fachwerk design, with field nogging. There are a number of additions, including a lean-to on the North which required the creation of a hole in the wall of the gable end for ready access.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

Adam reportedly built this house only to discover that when his wife arrived, she refused to live in it because a damp basement would clearly contribute to athritis. Wether the account is factual, it is clear that the house has long been used as a granary and the interior is badly deteriorated. It is a fine example of the central hall plan with Küche and Stube. The walls are constructed of coursed rubble limestone which was quarried on the porperty. The arched lintel

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE course is of rubble,well slashed with mortar and centered over a curved casing. The enframement is unusual in that no stone sill balances the lintel course,nor is a wooden projecting sill original - as in the Langendoerfer house. The hewn rafters were butted at the ridge and their heels were slotted and pegged into the ceiling joists. These joists were extended to the wall line and are visible on the facade. This method of construction is emphasized by the narrow projection of the roof -- a common pattern in German inspired architecture in the area.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

This is a fine example of the vernacular press house. Though the original upper storey has been extensively altered and a lean to addition constructed, the barrel vaulted cellar is in excellent condition. The banked entrance is headed by an arched lintel course of rubble as is the small ventilation window on this facade. This lintel course also spans the interior ventilation shaft voids. The walls are of random coursed rubble construction, with pargetted mortar joints which replicate ashlar.

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE

A number of press houses survive in the Frene Creek Valley, for until about 1910 the area was covered with extensive vineyards. The Puchta family reportedly exported their wine in small quantities until the turn of the century. A small press house across the road (now destroyed) and the deteriorating structure now owned by Wismuth, also in Frene Creek Valley, were constructed by Adam Puchta as well.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES
This farmhouse is an excellent example of the vernacular interpretation of the Georgian style in brick. The structure is not unlike examples found in Hermann, and it is reported that the bricks were produced by a mason living in the town,who perhaps influenced the design. As in the late Georgian patterns, the entrance has assumed considerable importance, here the wide door with both a double transom and two side lights is the focus of the facade in five bays. The chimney arrangement is unusual and suggests a pampered wife (See additional survey sheet for original farmhouse) Both the walls, laid in common American bond and the cornice dentil course, are similar in design to structures in Hermann. The arched lintel course of stretchers is centered over a curved casing -- also a common design in the area.

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE

This brick smokehouse was probably built soon after the brick farmhouse. The arched lintel course of double rowlock is centered over a curved casing. A later frame lean-to addition, now a garage, sadly obscures the original design. The brick course in American common bond matches the farmhouse. (Also represented in survey).

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

This is a fine example of the way in which a stone structure grew to accomodate the needs of a family. Unfortunately the original log structure which adjoined the present dwelling was razed to create a patio (to the far right in photograph of primary facade). The outline of the original gable roof is still visible on the gable end of the stone structure.The first stone section dates from about 1850. The walls are of random coursed limestone rubble, with a solid span lintel treatment. Consistent with the date of construction,is the use of squared casings. The second stone section, of perhaps 1865, is a coursed rubble construction with a splayed brick lintel treatment. These two sections were joined by a frame bridge which now functions as a central hall in the five bay articulation. Though a careful inspection of the interior would reveal the necessary information, I suspect that the two stone sections were joined at a later date.The porch and dormer windows possibly date from this period. One aspect of construction is noteworthy: The rafter plate is exposed not only at the gable end,but on the sides as well,creating a striking cornice easily visible under the narrow projection of the eaves.

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE

This is part of the former Langendoerfer farm. The first Langendoerfer was Franz Jacob (Francis) who purchased the land in 1843. "A small log building still in existence, was the first living quarters while the larger rock house was under construction. The family moved into it in 1848. Franz became an extensive grower of grapes and wine maker. In 1863 he built a rock wall in front of a cave in the bluff south of the house using it as a wine cellar. This was probably the only wine cellar of its kind in the U.S. and was for many years ~~known as 'Langendoerfer Natural Cave Wine Cellar'.~~"

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES
This V-notched log structure was originally a double pen design which was later converted into a single dwelling. The passageway was framed to serve as a central hall connecting the two cabins. Here a door and window were created to give access to the central hall. Though I did not inspect the interior, it would appear that doors lead from the central hall into each room in both of the original sections. The more common plan in Missouri is to find an additional door for each section on the primary façade, while here access is

42 Further Description of Important Features

Originally a two room structure, an addition was constructed probably some 30 years later (1850,1880). Inscriptions in the brick dates the structure as no later than 1896. The most interesting feature of the later building is the wine cellar which runs the entire length of the house (20'x50'). (over)

43 History and Significance

Said to be the original home of an early Brickyard owner. The fact that all of the structures on the property are of local, soft river brick supports this notion. Rarely are all structures in the county built of brick, especially barns.

44 Description of Environment and Outbuildings

Brick Barn, Brick Tenant's Quarters, Brick Smoke House.

The cellar has a vaulted ceiling.

The original two room building has a loft and at one time had a staircase which has been removed.
The original tract of land, over 100 acres, was purchased by the City of Hermann. All but 7 1/2 acres were turned into an industrial park. The City then sold the house and outbuildings for residential or commercial use to William Beard of Kansas City. Mr. Beard is said to be interested in renovating the site and creating an antique store in the wine cellar. It is said that he will do the renovation over a two year period. He has, in fact,started to renovated as of 7/80.

42 Further Description of Important Features

Van Ravenswaay suggests that this residence in unique because of an interior door with wooden lintel. We feel that this was originally an outside door in the gable end. Observation suggests that the easterly section was added post 1860. The exterior window lintels demonstrate this possibility. Those to the west on the facade have a straight lintel while those to the east have later, arched lintels. The residence is in fine condition. The Strecks also have a superb collection of European and American Antiques. Property was an original tract purchased from the German Immigration Society.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

A rectangular plan,with entrance in the gable end and original belfry,this building is similar to other stone structures which were surveyed. (See,for example, St.John's Evangelical Church). The walls are of coursed rubble with well defined mortar joints,pargetted to replicate ashlar courses. The walls show evidence of extensive repair in the gable ends. The lintel course consists of a segmented arch in rowlock brick bonding. As is common in the area, casings are curved,centering the supporting arches. Consistent with German construction methods,the hewn rafters were butted at the ridge and their heels were slotted and pegged into the ends of ceiling joists. These joists were then extended beyond the facade and the ends left exposed under the low projection of the eaves. (visible in attached photograph) Note also that the rafter plate is exposed,possibly to replicate a cornice return. Porch is a later addition.

This is a fine example of the stone spring house. The barrel vaulted interior has not been altered,and the spring tap is still functional. One splayed window on the rear elevation provides light and ventilation. The walls are of coursed rubble construction,presently in need of minor repairs. The lintel coursze is a fine example of the stone segmented arch with tapered keystone.

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE The board and batten door as well as the hardware is original. Though Van Ravenswaay does not discuss this structure,he records the dimensions: 17'x17'10".

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

Original structure is log. Numerous lean-to additions have been made to the original structure and extensive alterations to the interior have been made.

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE

The present owner, Henry A. Hessemann, purchased the property in 1928 and continues to operate the property as a working farm. He has in his possession the abstract for the property showing the structure erected in 1850 in addition to a log barn. The original owner, Schneider, was followed by Wurle, Alleman, Haeffner, Rath and finally Hessemann.

44. DESCRIPTION OF ENVIRONMENT AND OUTBUILDINGS

Significant outbuildings.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES
Here, as in the other log structure on the property, the logs were extended to the peak of the gable end. Ridge poles which supported the original shake roof are still in place. The porch roof is not original, nor is there evidence of a projection or cantilever as in the other building. The spaces between the logs were not originally chinked, but rather fitted with pieces of wood for insulation. This V-notched construction possibly represents a later addition to the homestead.

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE Also visible in the photograph is the original wall of massive coursed rubble which still extends around a portion of the property. Though there is evidence to suggest that other such walls were once common in this area, this is the finest surviving example.

42. FURTHER DESCRIPTION OF IMPORTANT FEATURES

This ngelected structure needs considerable work if it is to be saved. Of coursed rubble construction,quoins are replicated with undressed limestone. The foundation extends approximately one inch beyond the wall line -- a technique found in other structures in the area. The lintel course consists of a rubble segmented arch,well slashed with mortar, and centered over a curved casing. Evidence of Venetian shutters remain,though they were probably

43. HISTORY AND SIGNIFICANCE not original. The primary facade was unusual in that no porch was added to the entrance,thus well articulating the formal symmetry of the vernacular Georgian.

This is a good example of a well executed frame construction. Though the stiles are much thiner (approx. 3 inches) than the exposed half timber examples, the nogging is well anchored with mortar. Only portions of the framework are visible, but the method of construction appears to be pegged mortise and tenon. The stone foundation is of coursed rubble and was extended to include two of the three lean-to additions to the original structure. Though this was reportedly Demonstrates early problem of how to deal with the filing station. This one demonstrates the protico design with Spanish motifes. Fake decorative roof is found over original bays with ceramic tile covering. A third service bay was added later.

43 History and Significance

Early service stations were often in the revival style. Neo-classical designs are not uncommon. Later the station was relieved of its eclectic paraphanalia and became functional in design. Lately there has been a trend back to the inclusion of classical motifes.

Building is very similar to the General Store in Rosebud. Finials are interesting. Combination of tin and cast iron decorative motifs adorn the front. Bay window on side has been added. Greek Revival window treatment on front. Tin facing immitates stone.

43 History and Significance

Owensville is clearly a town which developed after the railroad came through in 1902. This structure seems to pre-date, or perhaps, anticipate the train era.

42 Further Description of Important Features

Most of the Rock Island Depots in the county have been razed due to lack of use. This seems to be the last of the stations found on this line. A similar structure in Rosebud was destroyed several years ago.

43 History and Significance

Apparently Mr. F.G. Henneke was an important person in the development of Owensville in the early part of this century. Two buildings inscribed with his name are found in the town.

42 Further Description of Important Features

The original log house has been dramatically altered. A New addition was added to the east. At that time the original structure was covered with metal to match the addition. Stain glass windows were also added as was a porch. Original log design can be observed from the cellar.

43 History and Significance

The log house is probably one of the older structures in this part of the county. South of route 50, the strutures tended to be of newer vintage than their counterparts north of that road.

It would appear that barns constructed after the turn-of-the-century often employed the Upper Bavarian design with a gambrel roof. This may be peculiar to route #28 as three such structures can be found with i mile of each other.

Owner would not allow us on the property. The photo was taken with a telephoto lens. From what could be seen, this looks like a two story log house with an unusual dog trot design. The front roof extension was probably added later. The decay demonstrates the constrution technique.
