Halsey, Egbert W., Cottage
St. Louis County, Missouri
Historic Resources of Kirkwood, Missouri

Summary: The Egbert W. Halsey Cottage is located at 126 E. Washington in Kirkwood, St. Louis County, Missouri. Constructed ca. 1864, it is an intact example of Property Type D. Nineteenth Century Vernacular, Subtype: Folk Victorian. It meets the registration requirements for that property type set forth in the MPS Cover document "Historic Resources of Kirkwood, Missouri." This modest dwelling exhibits several characteristics common to that property type. It is a one-story frame cottage with a side gabled roof and a center bay front porch. As is typical for the Folk Victorian Subtype, the front porch is ornamented with Victorian style architectural elements. The bargeboards along the porch roof and the brackets of the porch posts all have elaborate wooden trim which has a vaguely Gothic motif. The porch brackets feature a trefoil pattern. A large oculus window is set into the front gable end of the porch. The house is highly intact; the narrow wooden weatherboards, five panel front door, and two-over-two wood windows are all early or original. The building sits close to the sidewalk on a relatively small lot, facing north onto East Washington. A small frame addition on the back of the house is the only exterior alteration of note, and the house today looks much as it did a century ago. It retains a high degree of integrity of design, materials, workmanship, feeling, and location.

ELABORATION: The Egbert W. Halsey Cottage for many years shared a larger lot with another small house on Washington and a larger house on Adams. That property was subdivided in 1903, and this is the only one of the three original buildings to have survived. The small lot it occupies today has been approximately this size since before 1926, when it was recorded by the Sanborn Fire Insurance Company. Surrounding properties are commercial or educational, and modern.

The side gable, one-story house has a symmetrical facade, which is three bays wide. The central bay is defined by a nearly square front porch which is sheltered by a small cross gable. The porch is supported by two square wood columns, and matching pilasters run along the wall on either side of the front entry door. The ornamental features of the front porch are the most notable embellishment used on the house. The porch posts and pilasters each have cross brackets embellished with sawn decorations which form a trefoil pattern, and a delicate sawn frieze along the front edge of the porch. (See photo 5.) In addition, the front gable roof of the porch has jigsawed decorative bargeboards, and a wood pendant at the peak. A circle window with a flat, wood decorative surround is in the gable end of the cross gable which forms the porch roof. The window has stained glass panels. The only other notable ornamentation used on the exterior of the house is found around the windows of the gable ends, which are surrounded by flat trim which is cut into an ornamental profile. (See photo 2.)

There is a projecting bay on the west side elevation, it has a flat roof and board and batten siding. The windows here, as well as ones in the attic level of the gable ends, are tall, narrow, one-over-one, double-hung wood sash. Elsewhere, the windows are two-over-two, double-hung wood sash, many with louvered shutters. The windows on the front (north) elevation have simple narrow wood surrounds. The wooden front door has five panels, and is topped by a single-light transom.

There is a shed-roof rear addition on the southwest half of the rear elevation of uncertain construction date (sometime prior to 1921), which originally served as a storage shed. Board and batten siding was applied to the rear of this addition in 1981, as well as to the remaining rear elevation of the original portion of the house. Board and batten siding also covers the gable ends of the attic level. The remainder of the house has narrow wood clapboard siding which is early or original. There are two entry doors on the rear -- one on the east elevation of the addition, and one on the south elevation of the original house. The door on the south wall is topped by a small transom.

The interior of the house, which is now used for offices, remains largely intact. The front door opens to a very narrow central hall, which has openings to the side rooms and the back of the house. (See photo 6.) The front door has plain flat trim, with flat pedimented lintel pieces above. Other door and window openings in the house have similar trim; a few also have slightly more elaborate lintel pieces, which feature a strip of peaked molding along their top edges.

The house sits close to the street. There is a paved drive on the east side of the house, which leads to parking in the rear, and much of this lot is covered by paved parking. There are a few large deciduous and evergreen trees in the rear yard. The western property line is demarcated by a low stone retaining wall with chain link fence on top, belonging to the adjacent property.

The Halsey cottage is one of the oldest houses of any type in the original part of town, and a rare intact example of the Folk Victorian subtype in the core of Kirkwood. It is a notably early house which exhibits a high level of integrity, inside and out. △

St. Louis County, Missouri
Historic Resources of Kirkwood, Missouri

Summary: The Egbert W. Halsey Cottage is significant under Criterion C in the area of ARCHITECTURE. It is representative of the Folk Victorian Subtype of the Nineteenth Century Vernacular Houses property type. The combination of a modest vernacular form with limited Victorian era architectural detailing is typical of the Folk Victorian Subtype. The house meets the registration requirements for that property type set forth in the MPS Cover document "Historic Resources of Kirkwood, Missouri," and falls under the context "The Creation of Kirkwood, a Planned Railroad Suburb--1851-1864." The simple side-gabled frame cottage is distinguished by a small central front porch which features refined and highly intact Victorian style ornamentation. The jigsawed bargeboards along the porch roofline and the trefoil designs of the porch brackets are especially notable elements which reflect the influence of the Gothic Revival and Queen Anne movements in residential architecture. Constructed ca. 1864, the Halsey Cottage is one of the oldest houses left in the core of Kirkwood today. The house sits on land which was purchased by area real estate speculator and contractor Egbert Halsey in 1863, and was probably built soon after. The period of significance for the property corresponds with its construction date of ca. 1864. The house is in very good condition, inside and out, and it exhibits a high degree of integrity of location, design, materials, workmanship, and feeling.

ELABORATION: The Halsey cottage shares many characteristics with Kirkwood's earliest surviving vernacular residences. The simple vernacular house, which utilized readily available building materials and a modest rectangular form, is typical of the houses erected by Kirkwood's working class residents during the nineteenth century. The use of Victorian ornamentation on that vernacular form categorizes this house as an example of the Folk Victorian subtype. The restriction of such ornament mostly to the front porch is also typical of the subtype.

Egbert W. Halsey purchased the land associated with this house in 1863.¹ Halsey was a real estate speculator and building contractor, who was responsible for the construction of the first public school in Kirkwood in 1869.² Deed records show that he bought and sold a good deal of property in Kirkwood during the 1860s and 1870s. He was also active in social events in the community, and was a founding member of the all-male Mandolin Club, which was organized in Kirkwood in 1895.³

this cottage, another small house east of it, and his main residence, which was south of this one, facing Adams Street. The other two houses have since been demolished. Halsey's main house was by far the largest of those three. The 1878 atlas reveals that all three houses had been constructed by that date, and surviving photos of the large house on Adams show that it was probably close to the same age as this cottage. It appears, therefore, that this cottage was constructed as a secondary dwelling to that main residence, probably for servants or other working class citizens.

The simple pedimented interior trim and Gothic Revival flair to the ornamentations used on the porch of this cottage suggest a fairly early construction date. The construction date has thus been estimated to be ca. 1864, just after Halsey bought the property. The cottage remained in the Halsey family until 1903, when Egbert's widow, Emma Jane Halsey, sold it to Edwin (or Edward) J. Rode.⁴ Locally, the house is known as the Halsey-Rode House. The 1909 Atlas map of Kirkwood shows that all three houses were by then on separate parcels of land, each owned by a different person. This was still the Rode house at that time.

The Halsey Cottage appears today much as it did a century ago. It is a rare intact example of the Nineteenth Century Vernacular House property type, and an especially notable version of the Folk Victorian subtype. It is also significant for its association with the working class of Kirkwood, a group which is somewhat under-represented by surviving historic resources in Kirkwood. △
