SUMMARY DESCRIPTION STATEMENT

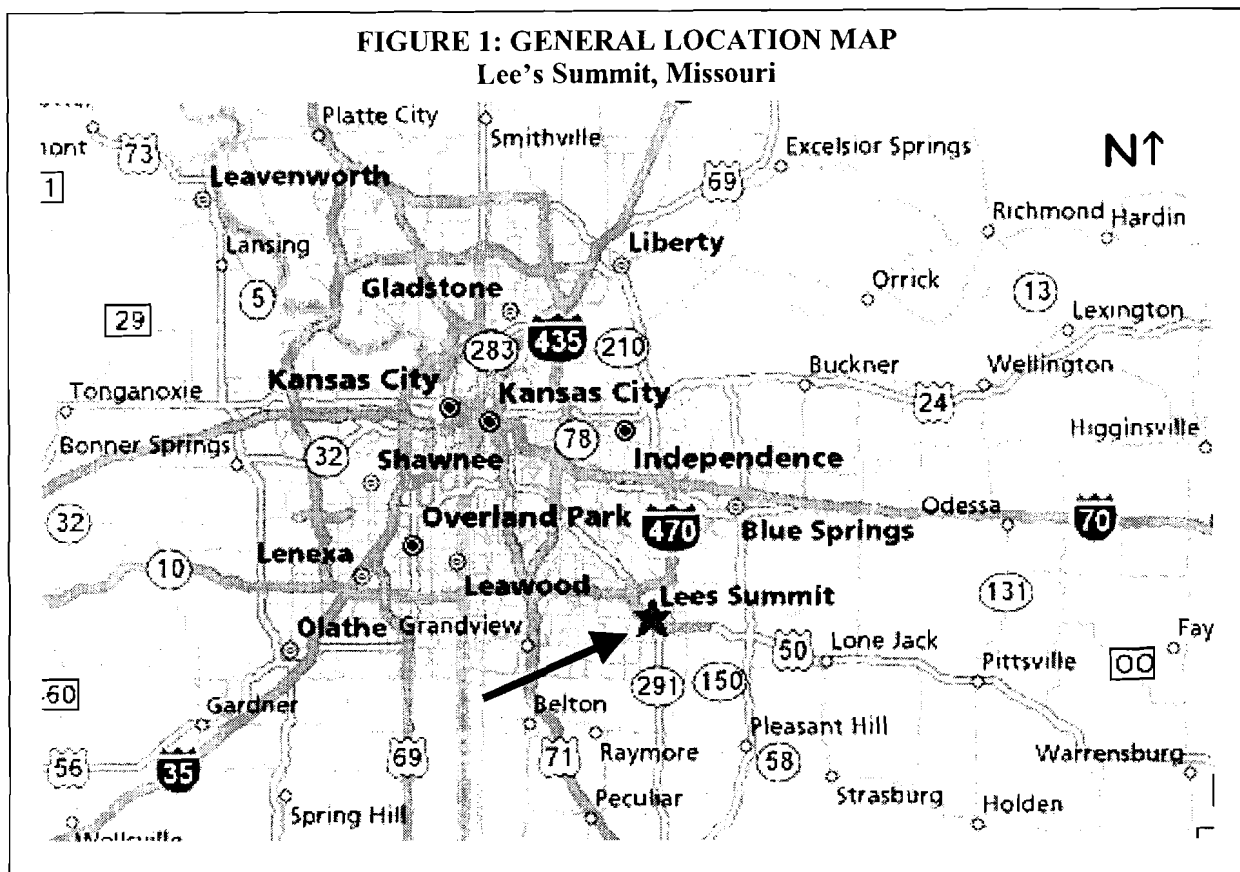

The Howard Neighborhood Historic District is located in the City of Lee's Summit, southeast Jackson County, Missouri. This twenty-five-acre district is in a residential area that abuts the south end of the historic downtown commercial area. The District includes the properties on both sides of Southeast Douglas Street and the east side of Southeast Miller Street generally between Southeast 5th Street and Southeast 7th Street, as well as properties on both sides of the 500 block of Southeast Green Street. There are eighty-nine buildings in the District, including fifty-six residences and thirty-three outbuildings, all but two of which are auto garages. All but six of the residences date from circa 1884 to circa 1940.¹ There are fifty-three contributing buildings, of which thirty-six are residences and seventeen are outbuildings. There are thirty-six non-contributing buildings, of which twenty are residences and sixteen are outbuildings.

The Howard Neighborhood Historic District as a whole and its contributing buildings meet the registration requirements and integrity thresholds for the "Single-Family Residential Property Types, circa 1865-1960" established in Section F of the Multiple Property Documentation Form "Historic Resources of Lee's Summit, Missouri" (the MPDF). The residences range in size from small cottages and bungalows of six rooms or less to relatively large residences. The architectural styles of the contributing

As a contiguous grouping of late nineteenth to early twentieth century residences, the buildings within the District retain a high degree of architectural integrity. All of the buildings retain a high degree of integrity of setting and location. Each contributing property successfully conveys its period of construction and its associations with the development of residential styles, plans, and types popular during the late nineteenth and early twentieth century.

SETTING

The Howard Neighborhood Historic District is located in a larger residential neighborhood adjacent to the south of the Lee's Summit historic commercial downtown along 3rd Street. The larger neighborhood that surrounds the District consists of similar residential resources dating to the same general period of time, as well as mid-twentieth century infill and subdivisions. The properties are organized on an alley-street grid system with gravel alleys and paved streets. Despite the alley access, most properties feature a driveway leading from the street to an automobile garage at the rear of the lot. The rectangular lots occur in blocks platted in a traditional urban grid pattern with alleys bisecting each block along its length. The properties generally have similar setbacks. The lot sizes vary. The depth of the lots is approximately 165 feet. Depending on the block, the width of the lots varies significantly from approximately 55 feet to 145 feet. Wide grass verges separate the shallow concrete curb and the concrete sidewalk throughout most of the District. The exceptions are sections of side streets and select areas in the south end of the District where there are no curbs and drainage ditches replace the wide verge.²

ARCHITECTURAL STYLE³

The residential resources within the District include a variety of architectural styles and folk house building forms that reflect a continuum of single-family domestic design that spans fifty-five years. The contributing buildings date from circa 1884 to circa 1940 and retain physical forms and architectural elements that reflect the design trends popular during the time of construction. Most of the contributing houses are wood-frame and are one- to two-and-a-half stories in height. There are a number of notable examples that include brick or stone masonry construction, particularly in the revival style houses erected in the early twentieth century. Architectural styles of contributing resources include Queen Anne, Prairie School, Bungalow/Craftsman, Colonial Revival, and Tudor Revival styles. Several of these resources exhibit architect-designed high style treatments; however, most reflect local adaptations of popular pattern book styles. In addition, a number of houses reflect National Folk House forms, including Gable-Front; Gable-Front-and-Wing; Pyramidal Roof; and Massed-Plan, Side-Gabled forms.

² The grassy strip between the curb and sidewalk, variously called a terrace or a parkway.

The following descriptions of contributing resources are organized by architectural style to provide an understanding of the variation found in a particular style as well as the different periods of construction. The descriptions by style also aid in an understanding of predominant characteristics of a particular style.

Queen Anne Style

The Queen Anne style is the most common style in the District. There are eight examples of Queen Anne style houses that contribute to its architectural significance. Character-defining features include a complex roof form, often with a dominant front-facing gable; an asymmetrical façade; a combination of decorative wood shingle and clapboard siding; and an overall avoidance of a smooth-walled appearance. All are of wood-frame construction with wood cladding and range from one-and-a-half to two-and-a-half stories in height. Often, Queen Anne houses incorporate delicate turned post porch supports and spindlework ornamentation in porch balusters, gables, and under porch eaves. Additionally, Queen Anne styling can include classically influenced decorative detailing, such as smooth classical Tuscan columns as porch supports, Palladian windows, and pedimental porch and/or roof gables with classical cornice and trim details. The Queen Anne style houses in the District vary in size from simple cottages to large complex houses. All were constructed between circa 1885 and circa 1910.

This house has a full-width front porch with tapered square supports and low railings with square balusters. Wood paneling covers the porch piers. Flanking the center entrance is a large single fixed window to the south and, to the north, a non-original side entrance (originally a window opening). The second story has two bays defined by a single window and a three-part bay with three double-hung sash windows. The windows are new one-over-one light sashes with molded trim. Decorative dentils extend at the juncture of the eaves and the wall of the house and porch.

The second story is clad with decorative shingles. The north façade has two stacked bays and a side entrance with a gabled roof and triangular brackets. A two-foot-high strip of non-historic siding has recently been applied to a section of the south elevation. A carriage house at the northwest corner of the lot features a cross-gabled roof, three hinged doors, and wood sash windows with six-over-six lights. Despite the non-original wood paneling covering the porch supports and the infill of what was likely a window opening, this building continues to clearly communicate information about its property type and style.

Description:

This Queen Anne cottage has a wrap-around porch that shelters the main entrance into the wing portion of the house. The porch roof is hipped and has paired square wood supports set on brick piers. A historic wood balustrade encircles the porch floor. The historic entrance door is wood paneled. A large window is located in the front gable projection at the first story. The gable walls are decorated with fishscale and diamond shingles and gable end returns. The historic windows with one-over-one light wood sashes are intact throughout and feature molded trim and flat board surrounds. A gable-front two-car garage is located at the rear of the lot. This house is a good representative of its style and property type. The porch alterations date to the early twentieth century and have gained significance in their own right.

This house has a hipped roof with lower cross gables that feature a slight bellcast shape. The historic full-width porch has a hipped roof and new square post porch supports. The primary façade has five bays defined by alternating single windows and entrance doors. The window openings throughout feature plain board surrounds and molded lintels. The removal of non-original elements including siding, shutters, and a porch enclosure revealed the historic clapboards and trim, including dentillation, fascia trim, and a beaded board porch ceiling. Description:

This Queen Anne house has a full-width Craftsman-era front porch with battered post supports on rough-cut stone piers and a low wood balustrade. The porch has a very shallow hipped roof. The wood frame multi-light door has an ornamental iron storm door. The second story features the original tall, narrow window openings arranged both singly and in pairs. Each window opening contains a vinyl one-over-one light sash window with flat board trim and bulls-eye corner blocks. A shed roof with decorative brackets shelters the pair of windows in the south end bay. The south elevation has a three-part bay window and, directly above, a small second-story spindlework porch with a gable roof. The north elevation has a box bay and a side porch with turned spindle supports. Vinyl siding sensitively clads the west (primary) façade wall and does not cover character-defining trim or decorative embellishment. Of note is the highly articulated embellishment of the front gable wall, which features a combination of wall treatments, including faux half-timbering, fishscale shingles, and a bulls-eye block motif. Additional details include the decorative verge board along the eaves and the corner boards with bulls-eye block capitals. A brick chimney surmounts the center of the ridge. This house retains good integrity for its style and period of construction. Although not original, the early twentieth century Craftsman-inspired porch is a common alteration to nineteenth century houses and has gained significance in its own right. The replacement windows and vinyl siding on the façade diminish the house's integrity; however, these alterations are sensitive to the original fabric, trim, and openings. They do not compromise the overall ability of the house to convey its historic integrity.

Prairie School Style

There are five Prairie School style residences in the District, all of which contribute to the District's historic significance. All date to the period of circa 1905 to circa 1916. The character-defining features of Prairie School style residences include low-pitched hipped roofs; wide overhanging eaves; large square porch supports; and an overall emphasis on horizontal lines. All are examples of the American Four Square form, which is the most common Prairie School style sub-type.⁴ These examples typically feature hipped roofs with prominent hipped dormers; three-quarter or full-width front porches; and wide overhanging eaves.

Hipped dormers are located on each roof slope. The roof eaves are wide and slanted. The porch extends to the south to form an uncovered terrace area surrounded by a stone wall and low piers. The south elevation has a three-part bay on the first story. A stone chimney is located on the north roof slope. A two-story addition with stucco walls was added to the rear elevation in 2006. Two additional dormers are on the north and south, each with paired six-light windows. The full-width porch has square wood supports that are grouped in twos and threes, and a front gable roof with massive returns. The porch floor is poured concrete with a decorative pebble finish that extends to include the adjacent sidewalk. Behind the porch gable are two small six-light windows with a ledge and brackets below. The second-story windows are wood frame and have one-over-one lights. The south façade has a box bay with a multi-light casement window and a separate gable roof. An exposed brick chimney is on this side and another chimney is visible on the north roof slope. Additional notable details include the different clapboard widths on the first and second stories, the shingle cladding in the porch gable, the faux beams exposed under the wide eaves, the full-light entrance door with sidelights, and the intact wood sashes throughout. This intact Prairie School style example of an American Four Square plan has a very high degree of architectural integrity and would be individually eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places.

Large stucco-clad piers and a slight arch under the roof characterize the porch, which has a new square post balustrade. The window openings contain one-over-one light wood sashes with aluminum frame storm sashes. Flat board trim surrounds all of the windows. Single dormers with hipped roofs are located on the front roof slope; shed roof dormers are located on the side roof slopes. An exposed brick chimney is on the north elevation. The south elevation has a shallow gabled projection with an entrance facing the front with a new wood deck. This Prairie School style American Four Square plan retains all of the key character-defining features of its style and property type. Although the porch railing is non-historic, this change does not compromise the building's overall integrity. The date of the stucco cladding is unknown. Although apparently not original and possibly historic, the wall treatment does not obscure the building's window surround or eaves trim, nor does it detract from the key character-defining features of the building's style and property type, including the wide eaves, horizontal emphasis, and porch elements. Smooth wall surface is not uncommon for Prairie style houses, and this house continues to clearly communicate information about its historic associations with the residential development of the District.

Description:

This house features a rough-cut stone first story and wide reveal synthetic clapboards on the second story. The three-quarter-width front porch on the west (primary) façade and the single-bay side porch on the south elevation each feature massive stone supports and rough-cut balustrades. The porch on the west (primary) façade has a shallow hipped roof; the side porch on the south elevation has a pedimented gable roof. The off-center entrance has a wood door with oval glass and a wood frame storm door. The two windows on either side have one-over-one light sashes. The second story has two similar windows with three small leaded windows with paneled wood surrounds in between. Pedimented gable dormers with returns and engaged columns are present on every roof slope and have paired windows. The eaves are wide and overhanging and have decorative exposed beams and dentil trim under fascia board trim. The north elevation has a second-story box bay with a pedimented gable roof and leaded-glass window. Additional details include an ashlar stone watertable. This house retains good integrity and clearly conveys its style, property type, and period of construction. Despite the loss of some leaded glass in the upper sashes and the application of wide-reveal siding on the upper-story walls, the building continues to communicate information about its historic architectural associations.

Bungalow/Craftsman

Of the five examples of Craftsman Bungalow style houses in the District, four retain sufficient integrity to contribute to the District's significance. These residences date from circa 1915 to circa 1926. They represent two principal sub-types — the Front-Gabled Roof and the Side-Gabled Roof — as defined in A Field Guide to American Houses. Character-defining features include low-pitched roofs; wide eaves overhang, often with exposed rafter tails; decorative beams or braces under the eaves; and full- or partial-width porches supported by square or tapered columns.

Tudor Revival Style

Constructed around 1929, the single example of a Tudor Revival style house in the District represents the Brick Wall Cladding sub-type as defined in A Field Guide to American Houses. Identifying features of this style include steeply pitched roofs; dominant front-facing gables; faux half-timbering; tall, narrow multi-pane windows, commonly grouped; arched entrance openings; and large exterior chimneys.

Description:

This Tudor Revival home has two steeply pitched front gables with faux half-timbering and brick and stone cladding. The entrance is arched. Stone accents and trims wall edges and wing walls. The windows include both the original six-over-one light wood sashes and new vinyl windows. Four aluminum frame windows enclose a central historic breezeway porch and six-over-one light windows are in the south front gable. An exposed brick and stone chimney is on the north (side) elevation. An enclosed sun porch and a lattice and wood deck have been added to house's the east (rear) elevation. A one-car garage with a gable-front roof, concrete foundation, and wood clapboard siding is located at the rear of the lot and is accessible from 6th Street. This house was constructed in circa 1929 on the site of an earlier residence. Some materials from the demolished house were used in the construction of the new home. This is an excellent, nearly original example of the Tudor Revival style, which is rare in Lee's Summit.

Colonial Revival Style

The District includes six examples of the Colonial Revival style, five of which retain sufficient integrity to contribute to the significance of the District. They represent three distinct sub-types: Hipped Roof with Full-Width Porch; Side-Gabled; and One-Story as defined in A Field Guide to American Houses. All were constructed between 1902 and circa 1925. Character-defining features of this style include an accentuated primary entrance, typically featuring a decorative pediment or gabled entrance porch; fanlights and/or sidelights; a symmetrical façade; and the use of such devices as dentils and/or keystones in lintels.

Mixed Style

The Mixed architectural style classification refers to buildings that reflect three distinct styles from different periods. NATIONAL FOLK HOUSE FORMS

Gable-Front Form

The simple Gable-Front National Folk House has its origins in the Greek Revival style movement of the mid-nineteenth century. Most examples of this form have rectangular footprints with their narrow elevation facing the street. They are typically one-and-a-half- to two-story houses with a relatively steep roof pitch, making them ideal for narrow urban lots. As a result, it became a dominant folk house form and remained so well into the twentieth century.

This house has a full-width front porch with a gable roof supported by three non-historic wood posts. The porch floor is wood supported by brick piers, and the concrete steps have an iron railing. The gable of the porch is shingled and has flat board trim underneath and cornice returns. The gable-front roof is shingled and has cornice returns. A shingled gable dormer on the east (side) elevation has returns and the west (side) elevation has a bay. A brick chimney is centered in the roof. The house retains its historic wood sash windows with one-over-one lights and its character-defining cornice returns on the front gable. This house is a good example of a vernacular housing type prevalent after the turn of the twentieth century. The loss of its original entrance door, porch posts, and porch balustrade diminish its integrity; however, it continues to clearly convey its historic associations. Gable-Front-and-Wing Form

The Gable-Front-and-Wing National Folk House form features a prominent front-facing gable with a secondary side-gabled block placed perpendicular to the main gable-front block, resulting in the distinctive L-shaped massing. Typically one-and-a-half to two-and-a-half stories in height, these houses usually have minimal ornamentation that is often restricted to plain fascia board or corner board trim.

Description:

This two-story residence appears to have a stone foundation with concrete block added for reinforcement. A porch with a low-pitched hipped roof is built into the "L" and has turned post supports and decorative eaves trim and brackets. During a circa 2000 restoration of the house to its original single-family function, an entrance was moved from the wing to lead into the gable front section; the space of the original entrance was filled and covered with clapboards to match the original. All windows have one-over-one light wood sashes with flat board trim and molded lintels. The front gable has one window above and one below. The "L" has one window above and one to below to the right. A brick chimney is centered in the roof's rear slope. A small shed roof extension is on the back portion of the "L." Although a simple representative of a folk housing type, this structure retains features from the historic period of its construction. Despite the relocation of the entrance door, this configuration is not uncommon and does not compromise the overall ability of the house to convey its historic significance.

Pyramidal Roof Folk House Form

While side-gable roofs typically cover massed-plan folk houses of rectangular shape, those with more nearly square plans commonly have a pyramidal (equilateral hipped) roof. Like most folk house forms, the roof pitch and the size and location of porches vary, and the architectural ornamentation is minimal. Two examples in the District exemplify this house form.

Massed-Plan, Side-Gabled Folk House Form

This category of house is also commonly referred to as "Central Passage Double Pile" house. Massed-Plan dwellings expand the Hall-and-Parlor footprint to a mass that is two rooms wide and two rooms deep. The side gable form is usually one or one-and-a-half stories in height, varying principally in roof pitch and the size and placement of entrances and porches. There are four examples of this house form in the District.

FUNCTIONAL PROPERTY TYPES

Contributing Outbuildings

Of the seventeen contributing outbuildings within the District, fifteen are historic automobile garages. These garages are typically simple, one-story wood-frame buildings with rectangular plans and one or two vehicular bays in the primary façade. Roof shapes vary and include gable-front, hipped, and clipped gable. Contributing examples retain the original wood clapboard siding and vehicular bays. Other contributing ancillary structures include two carriage houses. Both of the carriage houses are one-and-a-half stories tall, have large hinged or sliding doors in their primary façade, and feature large dormers in both the front and rear roof slopes.

NON-CONTRIBUTING BUILDINGS

The following thirty-six residences and outbuildings lack either sufficient age or have lost their architectural integrity and are unable to convey their historic associations. Those with secondary siding that does not obscure their significant form, features, and detailing may become contributing properties upon documentation that the original siding remains intact beneath subsequent layer(s) of non-original cladding material. Description:

The primary façade of this side-gabled house has four bays and includes a historic wing addition to the west. A three-quarter-width porch has a front gable roof supported by tapered wood Tuscan columns. In the primary façade, three wood frame windows have one-over-one lights and decorative shutters. DISTRICT INTEGRITY

The Howard Neighborhood Historic District as a whole and its contributing buildings meet the registration requirements and integrity thresholds for the "Single-Family Residential Property Types, circa 1865-1960" established in Section F of the Multiple Property Documentation Form "Historic Resources of Lee's Summit, Missouri." The District retains a high degree of historic architectural integrity, distinguishing it from adjacent streetscapes that have either lost integrity or represent later periods in residential development in the community. While the houses in the District reflect the evolution of architectural styles, it is the relationship between them based on their location, streetscape, building materials, workmanship, scale, and massing that creates a distinct cohesiveness. Most houses retain their historic wood windows, although many now have metal storm window units. Porch alterations are common, many of which took place during the period of significance and have gained significance in their own right.

The most common integrity issue is the presence of secondary vinyl, aluminum, or asbestos shingle siding. The National Register of Historic Places guidelines state, "If the historic exterior building material is covered by non-historic materials (such as modern siding), the property can still be eligible if the significant form, features and detailing are not obscured."⁵ A significant number of resources within and adjacent to the District are listed as non-contributing or were not eligible for inclusion within the boundary due to the application of secondary siding. If, in the future, the non-original siding is removed and the original siding is intact underneath, these properties may be reevaluated for eligibility and may be found to retain sufficient integrity to be reclassified as contributing elements to the District.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Howard Neighborhood Historic District, located in Lee's Summit, Jackson County, Missouri, is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion A for the area of COMMUNITY PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT and Criterion C for the area of ARCHITECTURE as documented in the Multiple Property Documentation Form "Historic Resources of Lee's Summit, Missouri" (the MPDF). The District has direct associations with the historic contexts "Residential Development: 1860-1960," "Railroad Market Center: 1865-1945," and "Architectural Styles and Vernacular Property Types: 1860-1960" developed as part of the MPDF and meets the MPDF registration requirements. The architectural and functional property types in the District meet the integrity thresholds established in Section F of the MPDF. The District comprises the contiguous residential resources in the additions platted between 1867 and 1909 in the area south and southeast of the downtown commercial area, which was within the 1909 town limits. It includes fifty-six residences and thirty-three ancillary buildings on both sides of Southeast Douglas Street and the east side of Southeast Miller Street generally between Southeast 5th Street and Southeast 7th Street, as well as most of the properties on both sides of the 500 block of Southeast Green Street. The District retains a high degree of architectural integrity and reflects the evolution of Lee's Summit's residential neighborhoods from the late nineteenth century through the onset of World War II. The District is locally significant in the area of Community Planning and Development for its reflection of the community's residential building patterns associated with the economic growth when the town flourished as a rural railroad market center during the late nineteenth and early twentieth century. It visually reflects the physical orientation and patterns of residential land use unique to towns founded along rail lines in the mid-nineteenth century. The District's significance in architecture is due to the continued presence of popular architectural styles and folk house forms that reflect the evolution of residential designs in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The range of architectural property types includes high style architect-designed residences, popular pattern book styles, and a significant concentration of National Folk House forms as documented in Sections E and F of the MPDF "Historic Resources of Lee's Summit, Missouri." The period of significance is from circa 1884 to circa 1940, beginning with the date of construction of the earliest contributing residential building and ending at the onset of World War II, a point in local history when housing construction halted due to wartime demands for materials. Construction within the District after the end of the war does not reflect significant community development patterns and consisted of sporadic and random in-fill housing. The period of significance acknowledges historic alterations in response to specific functional and design trends and accepts the buildings that experienced such alterations within the period of significance as contributing elements to the District.

ELABORATION

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PATTERNS

The District and the contributing properties are significant "Single-Family Residential Property Types, circa 1860-1960" as documented in Section F of the MPDF and they meet the integrity thresholds established for the property type. Under Criterion A, they include the following areas of significance as outlined in the MPDF.

A-1: Single-family residences that illustrate the initial development of neighborhoods in the late nineteenth and early twentieth century Lee's Summit.

A-2: Single-family residences that, through historic events and associations, are part of a cohesive assemblage consisting of groups of contiguous residential subdivisions that are historically interrelated by design, planning, and/or historic associations.

A-3: Single-family residences that are part of neighborhoods that developed along major thoroughfares and that illustrate the patterns of development of Lee's Summit.

The District lies in an area south and southeast of Lee's Summit's downtown commercial area east of the Missouri Pacific Rail Road tracks. The District includes complete plats and portions of plats filed between 1865 and 1907 for The Original Town of Strother, Howard's First Addition, Howard's 3rd Addition, Howard's 4th Addition, and Thompson's Addition.

As noted in the MPDF, development patterns in Lee's Summit mirrored those of railroad towns established in western Missouri in the mid-nineteenth century. Distinguishing characteristics of this pattern were a commercial center that flanked the rail lines, with residential development fanning out from the neighborhoods surrounding the commercial center.⁶ Like all rural railroad market centers, key roads and streets connected with the rural road system, providing wagon access to the railroad lines. Douglas Street, which forms the spine of the District, ran parallel to the rail lines and became the major north-south connector street leading directly to Lee's Summit Road, which connected with Independence, Missouri to the north. Early on, Douglas Street became a major residential street in the city.

The lots adjacent to the western boundary of the District flank the railroad right-of-way and, unlike later additions, the street grid is oriented to run parallel and perpendicular to the rail lines, which run in a northwest-southeast direction, rather than corresponding with the land survey grid laid out by compass points oriented by section, township, and range. Thus, the orientation of the District's streets and alleys reflects the early platting dates of the subdivisions within the District and distinguishes it from later additions that are platted on a grid oriented to the compass points. The dates of platting, in turn, reflect the period of residential growth associated with the initial gains in population that occurred after rail lines came through the community.⁷

These early residential subdivisions accommodated the community's demand for many years, serving as the location for the majority of the earliest residential development.⁸ The residential building patterns in the District, however, did not occur in a geographically sequential manner. Typical of many small rural communities, development in subdivisions platted during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries often occurred over an extended period of time. Construction within the District began with the platting of each subdivision in the late nineteenth century and continued in each subdivision well into the twentieth century.

U.S. Department of the Interior, National Park Service, National Register of Historic Places, Washington, D.C. After the arrival of the railroad in western Missouri, three distinct types of town plans emerged: those with commercial streets oriented to river traffic; those with a public square; and those with a central main street that either ran parallel to or perpendicular to the railroad tracks.

Because there were relatively few periods of rapid community growth, large-scale block-by-block speculative development was not an important part of Lee's Summit's community development patterns prior to World War II. Instead, carpenters and contractors erected houses for their clients on vacant lots among already existing residences or demolished an older house and used the foundation for a new residential building. In a majority of instances, the future owner contracted for the construction of the residence.

Nevertheless, most contractors also engaged in house-by-house or small-scale speculative development. Some of the District's earliest surviving residences are thought to be the work of town founder, real estate developer, and home builder William B. Howard. Another early home builder associated with the District is M. B. Ocker.⁹ The District also includes houses erected either by contract or under speculative development by Carl B. Sechler. From approximately 1910 to 1935, C. B. Sechler constructed over one hundred homes in Lee's Summit, as well as the high school and the First Methodist Episcopal Church.¹⁰

The District today reflects these development patterns. Each street reflects a variety of housing styles and eras of construction. However, the common use of street widths, sidewalks, and setbacks utilized in the platting of the additions, as well as second generation street trees of a size and growth pattern that closely resembles that found in historic photographs from the turn of the twentieth century, create a distinct sense of place and time.

The late nineteenth century residences in the District provide information about the initial pattern of residential development in Lee's Summit. Until 1887, the majority of residential construction that occurred outside the downtown area took place in the area south of the town's commercial core.¹¹ The highest percentage of extant resources in this area that retain their architectural integrity from this era are within the District.

Other patterns of development are apparent in the dates of construction and locations of houses in the District. By 1904, almost every lot along Southeast Douglas south of Third Street featured a residence. However, areas south of 5th Street still included vacant lots at prime locations.¹² During the next decade, homebuilders erected several large homes in this area. At this time, there was little development south of 6th Street on Southeast Douglas. Corner lots throughout the District were the most popular and it was not unusual for an early twentieth century property owner to demolish an existing nineteenth century house to erect a new home. Some of these large homes were the first architect-designed homes in Lee's Summit and all are representative of popular styles of their era of construction. A comparison of the footprints of the residences in the 1904 Plat Book of Jackson County, Missouri with the existing houses indicates that while newer houses often replaced some of the older nineteenth century homes, for the most part, those residences erected before 1904 that are south of 5th Street remain extant today. Closer to the downtown area, north of 5th Street, commercial expansion resulted in extensive demolition and new construction during the early twentieth century.¹³

Another visible pattern in the neighborhoods that developed after the turn of the twentieth century is a shift in the size of middle-class residences beginning around 1910. By this time, most of the larger homes in the District were in place, concentrated on double-width lots on the west side of Southeast Douglas between 5th and 7th Streets. However, after 1910, smaller Craftsman Bungalow and Massed-Plan, Side-Gabled houses began appearing, such as those on the east side of Southeast Douglas.

The presence of both the American Four Square plan residences and the smaller bungalows and folk houses reflect, in part, a nationwide trend in housing. The smaller houses reflect a decrease in square footage in homes to absorb the increased cost of technological improvements such as indoor plumbing and central heating and ventilating systems. The smaller size of houses at this time also reflects the decrease in the average size of the American family in the late nineteenth century from five children in 1870 to an average of three-and-a-half children in 1900.¹⁴ The American Four Square plans reflect a shift in room arrangements to accommodate central plumbing shafts and air ducts that resulted in fewer rooms and passageways than earlier Victorian house types. Other factors contributing to house size were the rise of a middle class that could afford to abandon rented quarters and to contract directly with the home builder to erect a modest dwelling, as well as the advent of home financing mechanisms from lending institutions geared for the middle classes, which spurred this development. In overall layout, scale, and size, all of these early twentieth century houses, both large and small, reflected conservative, comfortable versions of national residential preferences.

Sanborn Fire Insurance Company maps from January 1918 through 1935 show residential development continuing south of 6th Street. Also noteworthy is the appearance by 1918 of numerous garages at the rear of lots adjacent to the alleys. Development southward continued and, by 1935, the development between 6th and 7th Streets and south of 7th Street was almost complete.

The District today reflects these development patterns with each street featuring a variety of housing styles and eras of construction. However, the common use of street widths, sidewalks, and setbacks established in the platting of the additions, as well as second generation street trees of a size and growth pattern that closely resembles that found in historic photographs from the turn of the twentieth century, create a distinct sense of place and time.

ARCHITECTURAL STYLES

The District's significant "Single-Family Residential Property Types, circa 1860-1960" as documented in Section F of the Multiple Property Documentation Form "Historic Resources of Lee's Summit, Missouri" meet the integrity thresholds established for the property type. Under Criterion C, they include the following areas of significance as outlined in the MPDF.

C-1: Single-family residences that introduced or that illustrate technological achievements and new materials in residential design.

C-2: Single-family residences whose size, form, and/or stylistic treatment reflect definite time periods in the development of the property type.

C-3: Single-family residences that illustrate expressions of architectural styles and vernacular adaptations thereof that are rare, notable, or influential to the aesthetic development of the city's architecture.

C-4: Single-family residences that are the work of skilled architects, builders, and/or developers, particularly those noted for their work in relation to residential buildings.

The residences in the District range in size from small cottages and bungalows of six rooms or less to relatively large residences. Many of the earliest residences are important as lone survivors of their period of construction. The architectural styles of the contributing properties include Queen Anne, Colonial Revival, Tudor Revival, Prairie School, and Bungalow/Craftsman styles. Several of these resources exhibit architect-designed high style treatments; however, most reflect local adaptations of popular pattern book styles. National Folk House forms found in the District include the Gable-Front; Gable-Front-and-Wing; Pyramidal Roof; and Massed-Plan, Side-Gabled forms. All are residential styles and designs popular throughout the nation during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Most of the simpler homes reflect the great popularity of the Craftsman bungalow or were vernacular expressions of the Prairie School style American Four Square plan. A few are high style Late Nineteenth and Twentieth Century Revival Styles such as the Colonial Revival style residence at 602 Southeast Douglas or the Tudor Revival house at 601 Southeast Douglas (Photograph Numbers 13 and 15).

Among the earliest extant residences are the houses and cottages executed in the Queen Anne style and they reflect a wide range of stylistic treatments for both large houses and smaller cottages. Some of the city's few outstanding examples of residential architecture utilizing stone are also found in the District. Two significant residences, 512 Southeast Douglas (Photograph Number 13) and 513 Southeast Miller (right) are good local representations of Prairie School styles incorporating limestone materials. These buildings are part of the largest concentration of high style residential architecture in Lee's Summit, many of which served as the homes of some of the town's most prominent citizens, including merchants, farmers, and bankers. Several of these homes were the designs of architects. One of the most notable of these is 600 Southeast Douglas, which was designed by Kansas City architect Charles A. Smith (Photograph Number 14).

513 SE Miller Street, circa 1915

These residential buildings have significant associations with residential architectural and urban development patterns relating to Lee's Summit's role as a regional railroad market center. They reflect the work of builders and developers who responded to specific market and lending conditions in the middle-class housing market as it evolved in Lee's Summit during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries; in particular, economic conditions and financing mechanisms of the period that allowed owners to contract for the construction of their houses after they purchased a lot from a sub-divider. They derive their architectural significance as a group for the number and variety of residential building types and styles that collectively represent an important facet in the evolution and patterns of development of the city's residential architecture.

BOUNDARY JUSTIFICATION

The boundary of the Howard Neighborhood Historic District encompass the concentration of historic resources that retain integrity and are significantly associated with the residential development of the community as described in the Multiple Property Documentation Form "Historic Resources of Lee's Summit, Missouri." The District's boundary corresponds to the lot lines of the included properties and includes the open space associated with the public right-of-way in residential neighborhoods, such as streets, alleys, verges, and sidewalks. The contributing resources define the historic setting and historic sense of place, both of which are strengthened by the intact historic street network. The residential properties beyond the boundaries were considered for inclusion, but were determined ineligible for reasons of integrity or age.
