DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Old Town District comprises some 10 blocks and 5 partial blocks, plus the Public Market area, a space that originally comprised 8 blocks. The district is located in the Riverfront District of Kansas City, Missouri, and is situated in the general vicinity of Grand and Missouri Avenues, Wyandotte and Second Streets.

The district is plotted with streets that run roughly at right angles and parallel to the Missouri River at the north, reflecting the early importance of the river to the district.

Originally, Main and Delaware Streets and Grand Avenue were natural ravines between towering bluffs immediately south of the river. The development of the district as a commercial center depended on changing the topography significantly. Thus in the 1850-1860s, the bluffs were graded, streets cut, and ravines filled.

Physical barriers help isolate and define the area. On the south, Sixth Street has been turned into an expressway, the Sixth Street Trafficway. The Missouri River is to the north. On the eastern edge of the district is the entrance for the ASB Bridge and the Broadway Bridge entrance delineates the far western boundary.

The district contains approximately 58 structures of various age and design. Fifty two of these buildings are included for nomination because of their architectural and/or historical importance. The district has a long history as a commercial area and the buildings reflect that use. The only residential utilization consist of living quarters above the stores.

Typically, the buildings are constructed near the street line with the long axis of the building at right angles to the street. Most of the buildings are rectangular in plan. The structures vary in size from two to six stories. All are flat roofed with the exception of the hip roofed Board of Trade Building (site #61). When visible, the foundations consist usually of random or coursed rubble limestone. The primary building material is brick. Although the buildings vary in size and design, many of them are narrow, rectangular structures with facades close to the street, and multi-storied with living quarters often included above the business portion. Several of the buildings are embellished by rich stone and brick work and cast iron facades. Most of the buildings date from c. 1870-1890. The architects and builders of most of the structures are unknown.

Delaware Street from Fifth to Second Streets is the only section of the Old Town District that retains enough pre-1890 structures to provide a street scene reminiscent of the Nineteenth Century. This area has been spared an excess of intrusion and demolition, although numerous structures have had street-level facade alterations and removal of elaborate cornices. Other structures of importance are scattered in the district, being separated by intrusion and much vacant land.

A predominant feature of the area is the Public Market (site #1). It occupies, with its facilities and parking, approximately 10 acres. The market has existed since 1857 as a center for distribution of fresh produce and continues to be one of the largest wholesale fruit and vegetable markets in the United States.<sup>2</sup> Farmers rent stalls to sell their products and the concept has grown in popularity with local shoppers.

In 1972 an attempt was made to revitalize the area and turn it into a center for small shops, restaurants, and family entertainment. The area was given the name "River Quay" for promotional purposes. The success of that venture was short-lived for numerous reasons including financial problems, a profusion of drinking establishments, and possible underworld involvement.

The area currently has a large number of vacant buildings, especially since the demise of the River Quay project. A fairly substantial amount of heavy and light industry has been a constant factor in the district, such as warehouses and distribution companies.

The historic district includes the following significant structures (numbers refer to location on the site plan map):

- 1 (A). City Market, Retail Building, northwest corner, Fifth and Walnut Streets, 1939-1940, architect: Frederick Gunn. This modernistic two-story building has mezzanine floors at each end. A canopy extends over the sidewalk on three sides of the building.
- 1 (B). City Market, South Wholesale Building, Main Street between Third and Walnut Streets, 1939-1940, architect: Frederick Gunn. This three-story, modernistic building has wall panels of glass blocks and fluted pilaster decorations. It is in good condition.
- 1 (C). City Market, Central Wholesale Building, Main Street between Third and Walnut Streets, 1939-1940, architect: Frederick Gunn. This building is of identical design to site #1B.
- 1 (D). City Market, Vita's Cafe, 301 Main Street, ca. 1960. This contemporary one-story building has a pitched roof and brick walls. It is in good condition.
- 1 (E). City Market, North Wholesale Building, Third Street between Main and Walnut Streets, 1939-1940, architect: Frederick Gunn. This building is of identical design to site #1B.
- 1 (F, G, H). City Market, Farmers Market Area, Main Street to Walnut Streets, Third to Fifth Streets, 1939-1940, architect: Frederick Gunn. Three canopy covered concrete platforms with steel frames that occupy the central portion of the market.
2. Merchants Bank Building, 427-29 Walnut Street, 1920, architects: Greenbaum and Hardy, builder: Hoffman Construction Company. This two-story brick building has a facade of plate glass and green verde marble. It is in good condition and retains its original integrity.

INTRUSIONS

Recent years have seen several major intrusions that conflict with the homogenous nature of the area. The street level facade alterations of many of the older structures in many cases could be returned to their natural appearance. Old views of many of these buildings showing their original cornices and street level treatment are available.

CONDITION

In general, the structures are sound. However, their future is precarious, for there is a low rate of occupancy and they are threatened by demolition and/or future redevelopment. The district as a whole is in fair condition.

PRESENT STATUS

The recent River Quay project was initially very successful in promoting the area as a small business, entertainment complex. The area attracted much public interest. During this period (1972-1975), many of the commercial buildings were refurbished and some landscaping was done. Currently, many of the buildings are vacant and only a few shops continue to do business in the area. Recent underworld activity and bombings in the area have greatly diminished public interest in the area.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Old Town Historic District in Kansas City, Missouri is significant historically for several reasons. It is the site of the original Kansas City and became an important early Missouri River landing site. The district represents an area that has seen continual commercial use since 1839. Included in the district are the sites of the original town square, city market, cemetery, and the original city and early county government buildings. A number of prominent historical personalities are associated with the district and the architecture remaining in the area represents an important era in Kansas City history.

The Old Town District was the birth place of present day Kansas City. It is the oldest part of the city, being the site of the incorporation of the Town of Kansas and encompassing all of the original plat of "Old Town," the first plat in the city. In 1821 Francois Chouteau built a warehouse on the south bank of the Missouri River, between Independence and Kansas City. When a flood destroyed the warehouse in 1826, he relocated at the foot of today's Grand Avenue. Just west of his post was a rock ledge used as a natural landing for river traffic.<sup>1</sup> This landing was widely utilized by merchants from the Town of Westport, four miles to the south, and became known as "Westport Landing." The actual landing and surrounding land was owned by Gabriel Prudhomme. He died in 1838, the year he received the 150 acres as part of a government grant. The land was then subdivided and sold at public auction for $1800. The auction was declared void because the purchaser was an agent for the court-appointed guardian of the Prudhomme children. In November, 1838 the land was resold to a company of fourteen men for $4220, surveyed, laid off into lots and called the "Town of Kansas." Litigation over the land continued, but was settled in 1846 and the Town Company began selling lots. By April over a hundred lots had been sold and the rapid growth of the town began. By 1847 the population was seven hundred.<sup>2</sup> The County Court of Jackson County incorporated the "Town of Kansas" in 1850. Its first formal charter was obtained from the Missouri legislature in 1853, in which it was called the "City of Kansas."<sup>3</sup> Little growth occurred in the city during the Civil War years, but the war was felt deeply by the citizens. From October, 1861 until May, 1865, the Pacific House Hotel at 401 Delaware (site no. 45) was transformed into military barracks for Union Troops. General Thomas Ewing issued the infamous "Order No. 11" from the hotel, forcing Jackson County residents to abandon their homes and fields if they refused allegiance to the government. After the war, the hotel continued to be an immensely popular establishment for many years, and was often referred to as the "Palatial Pacific."<sup>4</sup>

The Missouri River is a significant but hidden feature of the area. The river was Kansas City's raison d'etre and was responsible for the early growth of the city. Not until the first train crossed the new Hannibal Bridge on July 13, 1869, did Kansas City's importance as a river city begin to decline and its emergence as a rail center begin.<sup>5</sup> One of the earliest paths of access to the river was Grand Avenue. There is currently no easily accessible place to view the river nor any means of linking the river with the rest of the area.

The area has a continual history of commercial use since the first merchant, Thomas Smart, established himself at the landing in 1839.<sup>6</sup> Because of its relative isolation, some of the earlier structures from the area have survived and the district retains the flavor of the Nineteenth century. The J. M. Shelley Building of ca. 1870 is at 306-308 Delaware (site no. 36). This was an early dry good establishment. George Shelley, the son of J. M. Shelley, became one of Kansas City's most prominent citizens, holding the offices of Mayor, postmaster, and police commissioner. He continued the dry goods business and was referred to as the "Merchant of Delaware Street."<sup>7</sup> At 502 Delaware is the Board of Trade Building, built in 1877 (site no. 61). This was the home of the Kansas City Board of Trade and one of the most important buildings in the district. The Board was active in promoting the growth of the city. When the Board moved to larger quarters, the building saw use as a bank.<sup>8</sup> At 301 Delaware (site no. 34) was located the offices of the Peet Brothers Soap Manufacturing Company. Peet Brothers later merged with the Colgate-Palmolive Company.<sup>9</sup> The area has been able to continue as a warehouse district with little redevelopment. Until about 1851, only the levee was occupied for business purposes and the remaining area was residential. As the business district grew, residences were driven outside its limits. Narrow Main Street, lying in a hollow, became the focus of business until Delaware Street took over due to its advantage of being wider and more level.<sup>10</sup>

The site of the present market (site no. 1), bounded by Main, Walnut, Fourth, and Fifth Street, was originally donated to the city in 1846 "for public use forever" by the pioneer Gillis Family as a public square. The square was included in the plat of 1846. In April, 1857 the City Council leased part of the square to the Scheibel Brothers for $50 yearly rent and allowed them to erect a market building. The square has been the site of a market ever since.<sup>11</sup> In October, 1856, the City Council enacted an ordinance authorizing the construction of a City Hall and market house on the public square. This was the first of three market buildings to be erected on the site. For nearly forty years, the entire town revolved around the market. Hotels and business houses were jammed around the edge of the square facing the market.<sup>12</sup> In 1906 the city bought additional land adjacent to the old square and a farmer's market was built in 1910. In 1931 the city voted bonds to provide modern market facilities. Both the old public market and the farmer's market of 1910 were demolished and a new market was constructed in 1940. Further expansion occurred in 1948 and in 1971 when a new shed was constructed to accommodate out-of-town truckers along the east side of Walnut between Third and Fifth Streets.<sup>13</sup>

In pioneer days, the market was jammed with Indian fighters, trappers and traders. Wagon trains also stopped there to get supplies for journeys over the Santa Fe Trail. Merchants in the early days, as today, sought to increase the number of shoppers and their purchases. One method which drew enormous crowds were the balloon ascensions, with either parachute drops or trapeze performers suspended below the balloons. Local entertainment also helped attract crowds to the market area. On the southwest corner of Fourth and Walnut was the Theatre Comique, now demolished. Among its featured entertainment were burlesque shows and men and women wrestlers. On the southwest corner of Fifth and Walnut, across from the market was the Gillis Opera House, now replaced with a newer building, (site no. 3), where plays and concerts were presented.<sup>14</sup> A popular restaurant was located at 507 Walnut (site no. 7). Horton's Oyster and Chop House made a specialty of oysters.<sup>15</sup>

The original town cemetery was located on Independence Avenue from Oak to Locust. From 1847-1857 it was the only graveyard in Kansas City. In the 1870s during George M. Shelley's term as mayor, he decided to turn the cemetery into a park. He had the bodies moved, the ground leveled and beautified, and the square became known as Shelley Park.<sup>16</sup>

The public square was also the seat of city and county government from 1857-1937. The first City Hall was built on the northwest corner of the public square, at Fourth and Main in 1857. The second City Hall was constructed on the same site, in 1892, against much public protest, and occupied the west half of the square.<sup>17</sup> During its construction, city offices were scattered in rented locations throughout the business district. In 1910 an addition to the City Hall and a fire station were added to the south. These were demolished in 1938 when city government moved out of the Old Town District to a new building at Twelfth and Oak.<sup>18</sup>

The first courthouse in the area was originally begun as a hotel in 1868 at Second and Main Streets. When money ran out before construction was finished, it was taken over as the County Courthouse. A cyclone destroyed the building in 1886 and temporary quarters were rented in the building at the southwest corner of Fourth and Delaware and later in the Board of Trade Building. A second courthouse opened in 1892 at Missouri and Oak Streets. This building rather rapidly became antiquated, unsafe, and most of all, inconvenient.<sup>19</sup> However, it was not replaced until the present Jackson County Courthouse was built at Twelfth and Oak in 1934.<sup>20</sup>

Many personalities of national prominence were associated with the Old Town District. By 1875 the City of Kansas had become a capital of western cowtowns. Familiar figures on the streets of the area were Wild Bill Hickok, Wyatt Earp, Bat

Masterson, and Doc Holliday.<sup>21</sup> Around 1884 Frederick Remington was a silent partner in Bishop and Christy's Saloon at 119 West Sixth (now demolished). He spent his time there painting until he was discovered by the art dealer William Findlay at the age of twenty-three. George Caleb Bingham moved to Kansas City in 1870 to make his permanent home. He had a studio at 302 Main (no longer extant) where he painted his last copy of Order No. 11 on a linen table cloth.<sup>22</sup> When in Kansas City, Jesse James made his home at the Doggett House, a family hotel located on West Sixth Street between Walnut Street and Grand Avenue (demolished.)<sup>23</sup> Early Kansas City newspapers had their start in the Old Town District. William Rockhill Nelson founded the Kansas City Star at 115 West Sixth Street (now demolished).<sup>24</sup> Eugene Field, the poet and newspaper man, worked for the Kansas City Times and was named managing editor in 1880. In 1871 the Times was located on Fourth Street between Main and Delaware Streets, and its growth resulted in a move in 1878 to Fifth Street between Main and Delaware Streets. Both the Times' buildings have since been demolished.<sup>25</sup>

By the 1870s the population had grown so that the city was reaching south. The railroads had essentially replaced river commerce. The flood of 1903 encouraged even more businesses to rebuild further south out of the reaches of the river. The residential population of the area declined and the district became essentially industrial as well as a center for prostitution and gambling. A long period of subsistence began for the area. For over sixty years, it served as a low-rent area with cheap hotels, bars, rooming houses interspersed among its warehouses. Brief attempts were made to revitalize the area in the 1920s and 1940s, but no great change was noted.<sup>26</sup> The late 1960s thru 1970s were a period of resurgence of interest in renovation and restoration of old neighborhoods, and the Old Town District has briefly benefited from this phenomena.

The survey of Missouri's historic sites is based on the selection of sites as they relate to theme studies as outlined in "Missouri's State Historic Preservation Plan." The Old Town Historic District is, therefore, being nominated to the National Register of Historic Places as an example of the themes of "Architecture," "Fine Arts and Humanities," "Economics," "Exploration and Settlement," "Technology," "Urban Design," "Military Affairs," "Political Affairs," and "Society."
